THE FATE OF THE PATROL

BY FRANK H. SWEET.

As the factor's patrol, as it was called, emerged from the trees, a man came from the cabin; a man as strong and powerfully built as Raoul, the leader. He was followed by several dogs, which made straight for the stranger.

"Here you, come back!" the man called. Then, as the dogs obeyed, he advanced with outstretched hand and the greeting, "Glad to see you, stranger. You're the first outside face I've seen since I ran across one of your trapper hunters, nearly a year ago. I like solitude, but not too much of it."

Raoul made a grimace. He wished the man had shown a hostile front. It would be better to disclose their errand at once.

"We have come," he began, but was cut short by the cordial grasp of the man's hand.

"I see, to have some hunting. Well, this valley has plenty of it, and you're welcome. I'm sorry my cabin's so small, but I'll just about do for you. You must make your camp right between the cabin and the stream, so we can be neighbors. But, pardon me, my name's Jean Leblanc."

He waited, inquiringly, and perforce Raoul answered, "You may call me Raoul, and these," pointing to his men,

"You see, I—that is, Toinette and I have talked it over."

After the other, "are Jacques, Louis, Pierre, Octave, Henri and Prosper?"

"All good French names," approvingly, "Well, Raoul, if you and these friends are not too tired, I would like you to go along with us after the biggest bear I ever saw. He killed a dog this morning, and we ran him into a thicket of small pines. One of my youngsters is watching now. I came back after morning ammunition, and we were all starting out just as you appeared. You can make camp wherever, of course, there is no real need for your help. I'll just tell you as well as be in with the fun. Wait a minute, while I hurry up the youngsters. They're all going, and every last one of them is as good a hunter as I am. Laughing heartily, he walked back toward the cabin, calling, "Oh, Toinette, Marie, Josephine, we're waiting."

Raoul had turned to his companions: "Right as well, I suppose," he said. "It'll not take long, and I may have a better chance to tell the man that he must leave the country. At any rate, I'll get us away from the cabin and the man's wife. I don't like making trouble with women."

"But there are the children," suggested Pierre. "They are going along."

"Children don't understand as a woman

OVERWORKED

SCHOOL CHILDREN IN SALT LAKE CITY

Will Be Interested in This Incident.

Miss Edna Gould of Coldwater, Mich., writes: "I was so tired, run down and utterly nervous that I was obliged to stay out of school and the doctor thought I would have to give up entirely, but I decided to try the new cod liver oil. I have made a wonderful improvement, and feel well now. I have the greatest confidence in Vinol, and feel like recommending it to every third-out over-worked girl or boy, as it did so much for me."

Our local druggist, Mr. Druehl of Druehl & Franken, says: "There is no doubt Vinol is the best medicine in the world for growing school girls and boys. It is not a patent medicine, but a delicious oil preparation, containing in a concentrated form all the strength-giving body-building elements of cod liver oil, but without oil or grease, and it contains cod liver oil and emulsion. Vinol contains just the elements necessary to make for each child new vitality, strong flesh and muscle tissue, strong structure, rich, red blood, and great strength.

Let every mother in Salt Lake City try Vinol for her children, on our guarantee to return the money if it fails. It is also nothing equal to Vinol to give strength for old people or people who are run down, tired and debilitated. Try it, and don't like it we will give you money back. would. Besides, I can probably draw this Jean to one side and reason with him. I want to be obliged to burn his cabin and use violence."

"Hiss-sh!" Pierre whispered, sharply.

There was so much wonder and consternation in the voice that Raoul whirled quickly, following the direction of his gaze. Jean Leblanc was coming toward them, and behind him were the children, five young women in neat hunting costume, with rifles over their shoulders. The youngest was 15 or 16.

"Now we are all ready to start," cried Jean Leblanc. "But first let me present you to my daughter, Toinette. She is the best of the lot, is watching the bear. These others are Toinette, Marie, Josephine, Jeanne and Suzette. Girls, this fine-looking man who seems to be the leader of our friends, is Monsieur Raoul. He has won Marie. They have other names that identify them better, I suppose, but I have not learned them yet. Now come along, we'll get impatient and kill the bear herself."

That evening, as the men were sitting by their campfire smoking, Pierre turned suddenly to Raoul.

"Did you tell Leblanc?" he asked.

Raoul knocked the ashes from his pipe and gazed thoughtfully at the fire.

"No," he answered. "I did not find a good chance. Tomorrow will be time enough."

The next evening the question was repeated in much the same tone, but the answer was more impatient.

"If you are in such a hurry to get back, Pierre," Raoul added, "you may start by yourself tonight. And he rose abruptly and sought his blanket."

A week later they were still there. Then one day as Raoul was walking along the bank of the stream, humming the refrain of a little song which Aliene had sung the evening before, he saw Pierre leave the cabin and come toward him. He ceased humming and advanced to meet him.

"I was just thinking of you, Pierre," he said.

"One minute, Raoul," interrupted Pierre, looking embarrassed. "I have a little request to make. May I have two or three days' absence?"

"For what?" wonderingly.

"Why, I—I want to go down to the post after Father Leclerc. You see, I—that is, Toinette and I have talked it over. I—I shall be sorry to leave you, Raoul, but this valley is the best place I ever saw for a home. There is plenty of game and—"

"Yes, I understand, Pierre," said Raoul, kindly. "There was an odd look on his face as he added: 'You may go, of course. Tell Jacques I want to see him.'"

Jacques was walking under the pine with Suzette, but he came promptly at the message.

"I want you to take the men and go back to the post," Raoul ordered. "The factor will be wondering where we are. Tell him—what?"

"I—I would rather you'd send Louis—no, I mean Prosper—Louis wants to stay here. You see, Pierre is going after Father Leclerc, and Suzette and—"

"Oh, yes, I see," dryly. "And Louis wants to stay also. Is it Marie?"

"No," eagerly. "It's Josephine—Octave has won Marie. They need to be married at the same time."

And Henri and Prosper? Have they talked it over with Jeanne and—oh, no, there are not any more girls. Which of them has spoken to Jeanne about Father Leclerc?"

Jacques grinned.

"Prosper has tried to," he answered, "but Jeanne laughs in his face. She says she don't want any man. They need too much looking after. But then Jeanne is young," philosophically. "She will learn better. Prosper says he will settle in the valley and wait."

"So," thoughtfully, "there is only Henri to go back then?"

"And you, Raoul," Jacques suggested.

"Oh, yes, of course. Well, tell Henri to come here."

Before Henri came Raoul had laboriously scrawled a note to the factor, which read:

"My Dear Factor—I did not have the nerve to force the intruders away. And, after all, they have as much right here as we and the doghouse Aliene had sung the evening before. But then after the good father. When they return I shall marry one of Leblanc's daughters. Aliene and settle in the valley. You will have to look for a better man than I am to fill my place. Yours, RAOUL."

This will go to show why this association is a valuable one to all business houses:

We have just collected a claim for G. D. Golden & Son of Rocky Bar, Ida., wherein we traced the debtor from Idaho to New York State, all through the Eastern States, and caught him at Denver. But we had to sue the debtor and the railroad company he worked for before we got the money. But we got it—and that claim was eleven years old. Many people would have given this claim up as a "dead one"—but you can always depend on Luke. Some people don't like him, because he makes 'em pay.
